Dr. Etta, Family Specialist Brings Her Sidesplitting Seminar to the High Point Theatre

Award-winning comedian Etta May takes a sassy, silly and heartwarming look at today's American family.

High Point, North Carolina, December 31, 2010 – Unlike your typical family therapist, Dr. Etta isn't afraid to promise results. As soon as she steps on stage, she lets you know she's "gonna teach you to stop acting like an idiot in an hour and a half." What follows is a full 90-minute skewering of family faults and foibles that will have you crying with laughter one minute and weeping real tears the next.

Audiences first fell in love with Comedian Etta May as the lead performer on Country Music Television's "CMT Comedy Stage," second-highest rated program in that network's history. Her success there led to her being the star of the wildly successful "Southern Fried Chicks Tour," a fun-filled romp through southern life as seen from the female perspective. Since then, Etta has enhanced her national reputation with appearances on "Oprah," "CBS Sunday Morning," MTV and the syndicated "Bob and Tom Radio Show." And, she has been recognized as American Comedy Awards Female Comedian of the Year.

A one-woman show in two acts, "Dr. Etta, Family Specialist," is a PG-13 rated "seminar" that will not only teach you how to stop acting like an idiot, but will also fill you in on the three main "...tions" of marriage – aggravation, revelation and humiliation – as well as offer plenty of sympathetic advice to families caught in the crazed new world of today's teenage girls. Whatever problems your family may be facing, you can be sure Etta's already been there and has found a way to laugh herself through. So, make an appointment with Dr. Etta, Family Specialist on Saturday, February 12, 8:00 p.m., and get a healthy dose of common sense for the common man as you enjoy a sidesplitting, heartwarming take on the troubles that are common to all families. Tickets are $30 orchestra, $25 balcony, available through www.highpointtheatre.com or by calling the box office at 336-887-3001.
